Extract of a Letter from the HAGUE, October 29.

"THE ambaſſador of Ruſſia is inceſſantly preſenting memorials to the States General, preſſing their high mightineſſes to pay a million of Dutch florins for the Ruſſian troops which are in their pay. The Bavarians likewiſe demand money; and the prince of Wurtſburg has made very ſtrong remonſtrances upon this ſubject, and heavy complaints of the military ſolicitors, which they are obliged to make uſe of. The other princes of the empire, who have troops in the pay of the republic, inſiſt in like manner upon the payment of what is due to them; but the coffers of the republic are empty, and if the India company does not come in ſpeedily to it's aſſiſtance, nobody knows where it will find the neceſſary funds for ſupplying it's preſſing wants. The expedient which has been made uſe of, for proviſionally ſupplying the place of the aboliſh'd taxes, does not in any ſort anſwer the ideas which had been form'd of it. Rents too are ill paid for want of money, which it is apprehended is going to be ſtill more ſcarce. It's likewiſe much to be feared, that the government will find great difficulty to extricate itſelf from the labyrinth it is in, in reſpect to it's finances; becauſe the aſſembly of the ſtates of Holland, which is the great meaſure the regulator of the other aſſemblies of the republic, cannot reſolve upon any ſolid plan; tho' it is aſſured, that the prince ſtadtholder has ſeveral in his cuſtody which could not fail of ſucceeding; but hitherto the good intentions of his ſerene highneſs have been obſtinately traverſed in the aſſembly of their noble and great in ſtheneſſes. The regency of Amſterdam have been accuſed of being the cauſe of this. It's now more than a month ſince they have been changed, and yet there is no amendment in their deliberations, which are ſtill extremely tedious, becauſe they can agree upon nothing. The regencies of Haerlem, Leyden, Rotterdam, Tergau, Dort, Gorcum, and the Brill, have been and are to be alſo changed; which ought certainly to produce the effect deſired, ſeeing there is the utmoſt reaſon to ſuppoſe, that the prince will put none into place but ſuch as will readily obey his orders. Or do not theſe magiſtrates conduct themſelves as thoſe who become counſellors in the parliament of Paris? who, though they have been educated in the ſtricteſt principles of Loyola, as ſoon as ever they ſet foot into the great chamber, one would imagine that the air which they breath there, has a power of metamorphoſing their ſentiments and thoughts; ſince the moſt determined Molmiſt becomes in an inſtant the defendent of the Galliean church, an enemy of the Ultramontaine maxims, and in ſhort a very Janſeniſt."

LONDON.

Extract of a Letter from Liſbon, November 12.

"The Warwick Indiaman, from Bengal, belonging to the Engliſh Eaſt India company, has put in here, as alſo the St. George ſloop, which laſt was ſent from Fort St. David's 22 months ago, with diſpatches for England, whither ſhe has ſince continued her courſe; but the Warwick remains here, and will be obliged to unload, in order to be refitted. By theſe veſſels we have advice, that commodore Griffin had not yet made himſelf maſter of Pondicherry, at the time of their ſailing, for want of men enough for an enterprize of that nature; but that he had made ſuch diſpoſitions, that upon admiral Boſcawen's arrival, the fortreſs would infallibly be obliged to ſurrender; which was ſo certain, that the inhabitants had already retired further into the country, with their beſt effects."

Extract of a Letter from Paris, December 6, N. S.

"As to the affair of the young Pretender, we have to relate, that the courier that was ſent to Rome, upon his firſt or ſecond refuſal to depart the kingdom, being return'd, and having brought the king a letter from the chevalier de St. George, in which was incloſed another unſealed, addreſſed to prince Edward; his majeſty, after peruſing the laſt, ſent it to the prince, who ſeemed to make light of it, and to have no intention to take his father's advice. This being reported to the king, he call'd a council upon the affair, and it was reſolved that he ſhould be arreſted, and ſo thruſt out of the kingdom, ſince he would not leave it in a handſome manner. So early as Monday the 5th inſtant, it was known all over Paris, that the duke de Byron, colonel of the French regiment of guards, had received orders from the king to that purpoſe: And accordingly thirteen men were prick'd out of every company, to cover this exploit, and eight ſerjeants in diſguiſe were order'd to ſtand in the two paſſages of the opera houſe. The next day, about 7 in the evening (the ſecret, it ſeems, being known by every body but the Pretender and his friends), prince Edward arrived with three lords of his retinue, at the ſpot where they waited for him; and the moment he ſtepp'd out of the coach, two ſerjeants ſeized him faſt by the arms, while two others lifted him up from the ground, and carried him into the court of the Fountains, where the duke de Byron was waiting with M. de Vaureuil, major of the guards: the ſoldiers with their bayonets screw'd, keeping the people at a diſtance in the mean time, and ſeizing his retinue." M. de Vaureuil having advanced towards him, accoſted him thus; I arreſt you, Sir, in the king's name; deliver up your arms. The young Pretender preſumed him his ſword, and ſearching him, after they had got him within the doors, two piſtols and a poniard were found upon him. He exclaimed bitterly at the manner of his being arreſted, aſking whether this was the uſage for the grandſon of a king? After they had given him a little leiſure to vent his rage and ſpleen, and recover from the ſurprize, they put him into a coach drawn by ſix horſes, behind which were four ſerjeants, and two within, and three brigades of the city watch round about the coach. At St. Anthen's gate, which is the road to Vincennes, they changed horſes. Several hackney coaches followed with the pretender's officers, guarded by ſome ſerjeants. In the mean time a detachment of the French guards went to the prince's houſe, and ſecured all his ſervants, who were carried to the Baſtile. The lieutenant of the police went and affixed his ſeals upon the houſe, where a great number of fire arms and ſome barrels of powder were found; the young hero having reſolved to repel force with force, if they had come to take him in his own houſe, and therefor the court order'd the buſineſs to be done when he ſhould come to the opera, to prevent the effuſion of blood. Being arrived at Vincennes, they brought him into a ground floor, where the chimney ſmoaked to ſuch a degree that they were forced to put out the fire. The major having aſked him, whether he would promiſe on the word of a prince to make no attempt upon his life? he anſwer'd in a rough haughty tone, That he never made any promiſes to thoſe who kept none: Upon which the major order'd his arms to be tied with a ſilken ſtring.

Prince Edward having then aſked, whether he was in the hands of friends or foes; and whether they were going to carry him to London? The officer replied, No, Sir, my orders extend no farther than bringing you to this caſtle. He would eat no ſupper, tho' the table was ſpread; and he alſo refuſed to go to bed. However, he threw himſelf upon the bed in his cloaths, and wrapped himſelf up in the blanket; and ſoon after, being a little more compoſed, he ſaid, I did reckon to ſee the opera once more at leiſure; methinks there was to have been a very full houſe: But tho' he appeared more calm and ſedate, he refuſed to take any thing for forty eight hours; but Thurſday evening he thought better of it, and call'd for a cruſt of bread.

Laſt Saturday the king called a council again, on the affair of the young Pretender; and it was reſolved that he ſhould be ſent away the next day. Accordingly on Sunday the 11th inſtant, about 7 in the morning, the prince, and ſome of his domeſtics, heffes, fet out in three poft chaifes from Vincennes, without any other efcorte than the marquis de Peruzzi, an officer of the guards, charged to conduct him by the way of Fountainbleau, to the place of his deftination. Some fay he is gone the Lyons road, and will take up his refidence at Avignon: Others think he will be conducted as far as Marfeilles, and fhipped off there for Civita Vecchia. Another fet of people will have it, that he is gone to refide in Switzerland, but whether at Friburg or Soleburn they don't know; nor can any man tell what to make of this farce, 'til the reftoration of our marine, upon which they continue to work very diligently, clears up the myftery, and gives half an eye to fome people, who at prefent feem to have none at all."

Paris, December 20. There arrived here a few days fince, the duke of Richmond's fecretary, in order to take for his grace one of the fineft houfes in this city. The Englifh lords and gentlemen, who had retired from hence on account of the Pretender's fon being ftill here, have returned again, on hearing that he is fent to Vincennes. The reafon of the name of Edward, which the young Pretender has aflumed, has been lately very much the enquiry and converfation of many people here, who profefs themfelves furprized at his taking the name, when in all his declarations and proteftations, he calls himfelf Charles. But various reafons have been affigned, too many to enumerate here; but the names the royal almanack of Paris give him are, Charles Edward Lewis Philip Caflmir. The affair relating to his departure is at length determined: He declared the 13th of this month, that he was difpofed to conform to the directions of the king: His majefty, after having been informed of his intentions, was pleafed to give directions that he fhould be releafed on his parole of honour, provided he departed without delay, and retired abfolutely out of thefe dominions. He was releafed the 15th from Vincennes, and came to Fountainbleau, where he refted 'til the 17th; then he departed, attended by two captains of the guards, and a commandant of the mufquetairs. We cannot yet tell exactly the place where he will retire.

Paris, December 25. The young Pretender, after having parted from Fountainbleau, went directly to Pont Beauvoifin; from whence he croffed to Savoy, to go, as it is prefumed, to the canton of Friburg, where the regency received him with the utmoft fatisfaction, and treated him, with the lords and gentlemen who attended him, with great refpect, and prefented him with a magnificent fervice of plate, made by the king's goldfmith.

Paris, December 27. There have appeared lately five ordonnances from the king, relative to various reductions in the troops, and other points of a military nature. His majefty has been pleafed to grant to marfhal count de Saxe, one of the iflands in the neighbourhood of Martinico, with the title of fovereign, to him and his defcendents, with permiffion to people it, and to make fuch eftablifhments therein, as fhall feem to him expedient.

KINGSTON, in Jamaica.

Jan. 14. This day came in the privateer Refolution fchooner, Capt. Ovens, from a cruize, but laft from Rattan, where he has been for fome time paft; he has brought in with him a Spanifh prize, which he took before the ceffation of arms, in which was the governor of Fort Chagre, whom he ufed with the greateft humanity, and afterwards difmiffed. In the taking this veffel (which was greatly fuperior to him in force, having feveral great guns, fmall arms, and between 40 and 50 men), he was obliged to ufe a ftratagem, which had the defired effect. Capt. Ovens had with him at this time a fmall veffel, which he had taken fome time before, but could be of no fervice to him in fighting. He came up to the Spaniard in the night, and after the ufual falute, call'd out to him, That he had better ftrike to him, for if the other captain came up, meaning his fmall prize, which was behind, he would give them no quarter; upon which, being all in confufion with the fuddennefs of the thing, the governor called out of the cabbin window for good quarters; which being mifunderftood by the others, they fired a volley of fmall arms upon them; and they immediately ftruck, deliver'd up their guns and other arms to Capt. Ovens, but were not a little ftart'd at themfelves to find, when the fmall prize came up, that our captain had not more than 22 men that were able to aflift him in the attack.

Feb. 11. We are informed by Capt. Woods, who touch'd at the Windward Iflands, in his way hither from the coaft of Guinea, that the French guarda coftas keep a ftrict look-out at Martinico, to prevent a clandeftine trade; that they had taken 14 North-America men, loaded with lumber and provifions, trading on their coaft, and that they had ufed the captains and crews with the utmoft rigour, infomuch that feveral of the captains died in prifon.

Portfmouth, New Hampfhire, Feb. 7, 1748-9.

Some time in December laft, a man arrived here by 11 o'clock A. M. who had that morning walked from Exeter, about 15 miles, and the day before from Londonderry (the place of his habitation) between 20 and 30 miles from Exeter: He would have come through the firft day, but being unacquainted with the road, eat heartily and flept foundly there. His bufinefs was with an attorney, to get fomething done that would prevent his fon, between 80 and 90 years old, from injuring his daughter (of about 20) of her dowry; and after dexterously performing his bufinefs, was going 25 miles out of his way home, to fee how many children his grandchildrens grandchildren had; for they had been married feveral years. By his countenance and fprightly gait, he appears as though he was but about 50, 55, or not more than 60 years of age. He was juft leaving the grammar fchool when Oliver Cromwell died, of which he has a perfect remembrance; and indeed of almoft every remarkable event that has been fince, as well as many before that. The powers of his mind are as vigorous and active as thofe of his body. He labour'd laft Spring at days work, making ftone wall, and received common wages, or as much as any of his great grandchildrens children would have had. He calls himfelf 104 years old, but comparing notes, 108 is thought to be nearer the truth. He never had a moment's ficknefs in his life, and don't know what we call pains in particular, a load or oppreffion at the ftomach; never eating or drinking without an appetite, and never cloying that. He has thoughts of the matrimonial ftate, having lived near 20 years fingle, after living near two matrimonial lives. Rara avis in terra, Gulielmo fimilis Scobie.

WILLIAMSBURG, March 23.

Extract of a Letter from Barbados, Decemb. 11.

"The Chefterfield man of war, from Guinea, is brought in under command of the boatfwain: One of the lieutenants (named Couchman) form'd a party on board on the coaft, and fet up for themfelves as pyrates. Accordingly, they took their opportunity when the captain (Dudley), two lieutenants, and the purfer, juft went afhore, and return'd to hoift the barge on board, weigh anchor, and fet fail. All went well with them for 5 or 6 days, during which time the boatfwain being applied to among the reft, gave dubious anfwers, and only avoided giving them offence, and took his opportunity to found one and another of the crew on the matter whom he perceived leaft earneft, and by that means confirmed above one half of the number on his fide againft the pyracy; and without collecting or herding together, he took a fudden occafion to pipe, and call all hands upon deck, and in few words told them the inconvenience and impoffibility of fuccefs in what they were going upon, and demanded who was for their king and country, and for being honeft men? Whereupon, in an inftant, more than two thirds of the crew join'd him, with their ufual uproar: And the boatfwain himfelf, without any difcompofure, went and feiz'd the new captain in his cabbin, and clapp'd him and near fifty of the crew, his beft friends, in irons. Among them is the carpenter's mate, who it feems was one of Lowther the pyrate's crew, and from whom it is conjectur'd the whole has arofe; the lieutenant himfelf having been a man of extreme good character, as well as an officer, as in his private life and family, wholly fupporting a mother and fifters by his pay; but all muft be charged on him, as the commanding officer."

The brigantine Endeavour, Capt. Simpfon, bound from Glafgow to Virginia, with a conficerable quantity of goods on board, was taken laft October, near our capes by a Spanifh privateer. Several gentlemen here, who were intereftd in the faid brig. agreed to fend in fearch of her to St. Auguftine and Havanna, as fhe was taken out of time. They accordingly fitted out a veffel, and fent Capt. Simpfon in her. He returned to Virginia laft week, and relates, that he found the brig at Havanna; but could not get her releafed; the governor refufing it on account of admiral Knowles's having taken a Spanifh man of war, and burnt another, but a little before. That admiral Knowles, the next day after he took the faid fhip, took a packet boat from Old Spain; and finding in it the articles of peace figned between England and Spain, return'd to Havanna, and fent it on fhore to the governor; and alfo demanded reftitution of the Englifh fhips there, and of the Englifh prifoners there: To which the governor anfwered, that as to the prifoners they fhould be releafed; but that he would not deliver up the fhips, 'til fatisfaction was made for the man of war he had taken out of time. Admiral Knowles replied, that he could not give up the man of war, 'til his master's pleasure was known: So that several British vessels, and other vessels belonging to the British plantations, are detained on that account; and Capt. Simpson was obliged to return without his vessel. He says, that peace between England and Spain was proclaimed at Havanna while he was there; and that great rejoicings were made on that occasion. He adds, That Don Pedro was sent for to Old Spain, to account for his taking a Dutch ship, with a great number of slaves in her.

NEW-YORK, January 23.

Sometime in the month of December last, John Hadden, and Abigail his wife, both of the county of Westchester, departed this life; he aged 96 years, and she above 90: they lived together man and wife 70 odd years; they were taken ill within a day of each other, and lay ill six days, when the old man's lamp of life was extinguished for want of oil; and his constant companion, 10 hours after, shared the same fate; they were buried in the same grave. He had a small farm, which, by his industry and his frugality, enabled them to pass through this vale of tears with comfort and content; they were observed to treat each other, during the 70 odd years of their cohabitation, with all the affection and regard they had shewn during the honey-moon. You may truly say of them, that all their days were days of content, and all their nights were nights of pleasure.

Mr. GREEN,

THE Advertisement at the Bottom of this Paper, is a genuine Specimen of that odd Sort of Grammar and Orthography, in Use among our Underlings of the Theatre, such as Rope-Dancers, Jack Puddings, and Tumblers; it is taken from an authentic Original of the Author's own Hand-Writing, and is, verbatim and literatim, a true Copy.

Tho' these itinerant Virtuosi, may be a Degree or two below the Learning and Erudition of our Professors of Physic in that Way, or our Stage Doctors; yet it must be observed, that tho' the latter may sometimes write more correctly, yet the Performances of the former come nigher to what they promise than those of the latter; at least if there be any Deceit, they impose less upon our Senses, than the other Gentlemen do upon our Understanding and Judgment.

As you, Sir, are our public Intelligencer here, and the Pen thro' whose Hands all the Labours of the Learned must pass, before they visit the Public; so it is supposed, that you are a Person of such Diligence, Care, and Perspicuity, that you will not suffer either gross Blunders, or small Errors, to pass uncorrected into the World; but, like the diligent Dam of a young Bear Cub, lick them into some reasonable Shape or Form, before they are exposed to public View.——For this very Reason I commiserate you much, if many such Advertisements as the following come to your Hands; for sure I am, difficult and perplexing must the Task be, to correct, amend, and make them intelligible.——Therefore your publishing the following, purely as it stands, will be a Demonstration and Evidence to the World, of that vexatious and puzzling Labour you must frequently submit to, in putting your correcting Hand to many such inaccurate Advertisements, as must necessarily come in your Way; for I, and every one else, must suppose, that you are frequently under the cruel Necessity of undertaking that dull dry Labour of making Sense out of Nonsense, both for the better Edification of your Readers, and for the Honour of your own Press: For I doubt not but you will agree with me, that the Liberty of your Press, or any other Press in Being, does not extend so far, as to be the Promulgator of Nonsense and false Language to the World, whenever any Coxcomb of an Author thinks fit to compose such; and that you are the only Judge of such Compositions, intended for the Public, by way of your Typographical Machine, I, and every other Person, will readily grant.

For Publishing by SUBSCRIPTION,

A MAP of Pennsylvania, New-Jersey, New York, and the Three Lower Counties on Delaware,

By LEWIS EVANS.

THIS Map, besides those Provinces and Territories, contains,

A great Part of the Endless Mountains, and of the Country of the Six Nations.

The Route of the Albany Traders to the Fort of Oswego, on Lake Ontario.

The Path from Pennsylvania through the Mountains to Onondaga the Capital of the Six Nations, and to the great Lakes.

Some Parts of the adjacent Provinces of New-England, Maryland, and Virginia.

The several Provinces and Counties are distinguished in the plain Maps by their Division Lines, and in the colour'd ones by different Colours.

The Sea-Coast, Creeks, Rivers, Roads, intermediate Distances of Places, and Situation of Cities, Towns, Villages, &c. are laid down with as much Exactness, as the Dimensions of the Maps and other Circumstances will admit of; and by a particular Table, in one Corner of the Map, the Distances between the most considerable Towns may be seen at once.

There is also noted, How far the Tide runs up the several Rivers.

The Time of High Water, at Full and Change, in the several Rivers, Bays, &c.

The Variation of the Needle in many Places from accurate Observations, and the Rate of it's Decrease; and the greatest Length of Days and Nights in every Place.

Several Vacancies in the Map are filled with useful and entertaining Remarks; Barometrical and Thermometrical Observations; an Account of the Weather in this Climate; the Production of Lightning and Fogs accounted for; with other Articles recommended by the Curious to the Enquiry of Travellers; lers: And some Part of the Theory of the Earth naturally occurring, on viewing some surprizing Phenomena in the Endless Mountains.
